

The anti-piracy arsenal grows, now includes extradition.

Written by CommonStray
Friday, 22 July 2011 03:33

source: Ars Technica

A 23 year old British man named Richard O'Dwyer is facing extradition charges to the United States allegedly for copyright infringement. O'Dwyer was one of many site operators whose domain TVshack was seized by ICE (US Immigration and Customs Enforcement). The brain and hair pulling about it all - his site was a link site, not to mention that O'Dwyer has no connection to the U.S. except for being there once as a child. His domain and website was not even hosted on U.S. servers.

Take note "CHILLLLLLDREN" because if ol' Richie gets sent to the U.S. to face criminal charges then it means anyone that has a link to infringing materials or infringes themselves can face extradition and furthermore U.S. Justice, which in this case isn't justice at all.

Original Article